The Legacy of TAG: How Nick Thierry Built the Benchmark for Age-Group Swimming

When SwimNews (then Swim Canada) magazine first began circulating in the 1970s, it filled a gap the swimming community didn't fully realize it had. Meets were happening across the country, but no one was connecting the results in a way that allowed young swimmers to understand where they stood nationally. Nick Thierry — coach, editor, statistician, and the magazine's founder — saw the problem clearly. His solution became one of the most influential tools in Canadian age-group sport: TAG, the Top Age Group rankings.

Thierry created TAG with a simple purpose that carried enormous impact: give swimmers, coaches, and parents a trustworthy national benchmark. Each month, he gathered results from across Canada — first by mailed sheets, handwritten time cards, and faxes, later through digital files — and compiled them into ranked lists of the fastest swimmers per event, age, and gender. In an era long before online databases, TAG became the authoritative scoreboard for every aspiring swimmer in the country.

For athletes, seeing their name in TAG meant something. It was a measuring stick, a motivator, and often the first hint that national-level success might be within reach. For coaches, TAG offered a data-driven way to set targets, identify emerging talent, and understand the broader competitive landscape. The rankings shaped training goals, meet planning, and the culture of Canadian swimming for decades.

Thierry's commitment to the project was astonishing. He personally compiled and edited national age-group rankings for nearly 40 years, from the magazine's early days in the mid-1970s until 2012. Month after month, he produced Top 25 or Top 50 lists, ensuring accuracy through meticulous verification. Over time he expanded from age-group statistics into national, international, and eventually FINA-supported databases — but TAG remained his foundational contribution.

The CSCA is proud to relaunch TAG in digital form, to reconnect with its original mission: celebrating young swimmers, building national context, and inspiring the next generation. Today's athletes may have instant access to results and stats, but the spirit of TAG — a clear, consistent, and motivating snapshot of the nation's best — remains just as vital.

This relaunch is more than a revival of a familiar name. It's a tribute to Nick Thierry's lifelong dedication to the sport, and a continuation of the benchmark he built for Canadian swimming. The technology has changed. The purpose hasn't.

TAG is back — and the next chapter begins now.
